

Today, Clean Up Britain (CLUB), the only national campaign 100% focused on solving Britain's litter and fly-tipping epidemic, is launching a 10-point 'Motorway Action Plan' to clean up England's filthy, squalid and hyper-littered motorways. This is what we're proposing:

1. That National Highways does what it's required to do by law: "ensure its roads are kept clear of litter" - as required by Section 89 of the 1990 EPA
2. Close motorway lanes/slip-roads to clean up litter, and erect signs saying: 'Sorry, this lane is closed for x days because of selfish drivers who litter'
3. Use motorway gantries to say: 'Littering is anti-social: We'll fine litterers'
4. Erect cameras at all motorway slip-roads junctions/roundabouts (the worst spots for littering)
5. Ensure National Highways' staff/contractors stop dumping thousands of metal signs, cones and sandbags by the side of roads (which they do)
6. Set up a dedicated website for members of the public to report and upload dashcam evidence of drivers littering (www.DashCamEvidence.Org) + Erect large signs on the motorway - and in service stations - advertising this facility.
7. Start behaving professionally and not issuing 'financial penalty-free' contracts, and start checking the (often sub-standard) work of contractors. National Highways admit to not checking the work of any contractors' at the moment - unbelievable! No private company would behave like that...
8. National Highways to actively seek the powers from the Secretary of State for Transport for its Traffic Officers to be able to prosecute drivers on motorways who litter.
9. Support CLUB's calls to increase littering fines to £1,000...
10. ... and for drivers who are convicted of littering, while driving, to have their driving licence endorsed by six penalty points
